Consider the following concerns: Is the church moving in directions the Second Vatican Council never intended? Was the Council a big mistake? Has the church lost its sense of tradition? Does church unity demand uniformity? Is pluralism harming the church? Are mixed loyalties dividing the church? Who exercises legitimate authority in the church? You might think that these concerns are taken from the pages of current religious newspapers and magazines that chronicle contemporary church issues. In fact, they are all taken from the Acts of the Apostles and the many challenges surrounding the Council of Jerusalem as well as the letters of St. Paul. Stronger personalities you will not find. Every person and group involved is absolutely convinced that their position is firmly rooted in the authentic message of Jesus Christ. And still, they are at odds and sometimes in very serious conflict. This retreat will offer reflections on various events from the Acts of the Apostles as well as St. Paul's two letters to the church at Corinth in an attempt to gain insight into how our ancestors in the ministry dealt with serious conflict within the church while at the same time striving to sustain a deep faith in that church. As we will see, this is a process that started at Pentecost and never ended. It continues right up to our own day. Acts and Paul's Corinthian correspondence provide no ready answers to our current pastoral problems. What they do, however, is encourage us to ask the better questions. This retreat will examine some of those questions as they apply to contemporary presbyterates ministering in today's complex church.
